IN PURSUIT

Auto theft has evolved into a multi-faceted crime that is mainly driven by high profits with low risk. Organized criminals are increasingly involved in stealing vehicles, altering their identity and selling the vehicles to unsuspecting consumers or shipping the vehicle to other countries where they are sold on the black market at greatly inflated prices. These profits are often used to supplement other criminal endeavors.

Although the number of stolen vehicles has been on the decline, the complexity and expense of conducting in-depth investigations has increased.
